Title

Being part of a culture means to behave in ways of people whose customs, values, ethics, and beliefs are the same. The culture I was born with does not define my identity. Identity is how someone is and is formed by past experiences, beliefs, and attitudes. That you may identify yourself with a certain culture, it doesn't mean you are that culture. Culture is what you believe, the only things that define you are the customs, values, ethics, and beliefs. Culture changes over time, but it stays the same as long as the person who defines the person's identity.

In this story, every person is given a chance to define who they are from what language they speak. When Middleburg explains where her last name comes from, it was when she was born. It was Dr. Middleburg's daughter because it was a little different because it was her grandpa's name, and because my dad was from a village called "Middleburg". My dad talks about his culture and identity, by the way she lived in India, by what he had in there, and by what language they spoke. Culture makes identity come through when it is not optional, it is a part of you and it is not something you can change. It is a part of you.

When people compare themselves to others, it is often because of the different culture they want to show their identity as a certain culture. The culture they live in is not their identity, it is a part of them, and it is not something they can change only by
