This driver has been updated to the latest version available, and incorporates the following . The present invention relates to a magneto-optical recording medium, and more particularly to a magneto-optical recording medium having excellent signal characteristics, and is suitable for signal recording at a high density. A magneto-optical recording medium is generally classified into a heat mode recording medium and a laser mode recording medium. Of these two classes of magneto-optical recording medium, a heat mode recording medium is now about to be put into practical use because it can be handled more readily than a laser mode recording medium. A typical heat mode recording medium comprises a substrate of, e.g., glass having a thickness of about 1.2 mm, a heat-sensitive recording layer disposed thereon, and a thin protective layer of e.g. an organic resin, coated on the heat-sensitive recording layer. Information is optically recorded by locally changing a temperature of the heat-sensitive recording layer by use of a laser beam and a magnetic field is applied to the heat-sensitive recording layer to erase the recorded information. This heat mode magneto-optical recording medium is advantageous over a laser mode magneto-optical recording medium in that an output power from a light source for recording and erasion is as low as about 50b96ab0b6
